NATIONALITY IN MUSIC.

The French "patriots" who object to the representation of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" at the Paris Opera Comique, have received an amusing castigation in a quarter from which it was scarcely to be expected, M. Rochester, one would have thought, would always show himself more French than the French; but, in this instance, it is not so. He says he cannot see why the Parisians who drink German beer should decline to listen to German music. Assuredly it seems logical that the Parisians, in their depreciation of things Teutonic, should draw the line at musical composers; and the more so that they are evidently very pleased when their own "masters" make successes abroad. They are delighted at the reception given to Berlioz's "Enfant du Christ" at Hanover, and they ought to be prepared to reciprocate such courtesies. But, in truth, music is the very last thing in which nationality should be unduly insisted upon. To be sure, it exists. There are French, German, Italian, Austrian, Spanish, even English schools of music, and it would be bad indeed for art and for the world if this were not the case, seeing that in all this variety of style and character lies much of the charm of musical composition. Melody would soon pall upon the ear if it were all, so to speak, written in the same strain. But while music is thus various, it has this great advantage—which it shares with painting and with sculpture—that it is universally intelligible. The works of Goethe and Schiller, and Heine are, in the originals, sealed books to those who do not know the language in which they are written. And there is a certain sense, of course, in which music is written in a language foreign to multitudes of hearers. But if its infinite meaning cannot be mastered by all, its broad significance can, and, that being so, the patriotic is not only poor, but pitiful which seeks to exclude from a country all music which has not been composed within its limits.—Globe.
